

COME TO LEARN ABOUT ARCHAEOLOGY EXCAVATING IN PERU

2014 Sessions

- > May 26 To June 20
- > June 23 To July 19
- > July 21 To August 18

Number of weeks for each session: 4
Cost per session: $ 3 150

The Institute of Peruvian Studies (IEP), one of the most prestigious research institutions in social sciences for Latin America, announces the third season of its international Field School in archaeological methods Peruvian Central Coast. Fieldwork will take place at the site of Panquilma, a XII XVI century community located in the hinterland of one of the most important religious centers of the Andean coast: Pachacamac.

Panquilma is a multi- component site where the preservation of public, domestic and funerary architecture remains impressive. Based on the beach town of Punta Hermosa, 30kms south of Lima, this Field School offers personalize training in field methodologies, including the excavation and recording of a variety of archaeological contexts, as well as the cataloguing, preservation and analysis of amazingly well preserved botanical remains, ceramics, textiles, lithics, animal and human bones, among others.

Workshops on a variety of subjects will be carried out onsite to complement the training. Also, we will be visiting some other important sites in the region as well as prestigious museums in Lima.

Students may be able to obtain credit from their department after discussing that option with their department chair. Senior staff would be willing to discuss this with the department and provide feedback on student participation after the field season is completed.

